

Proverbs Daily Dose of Wisdom
Devotional

Chapter 23
By Debbie Wynn and Cindy Lewis

July 23, 2015

As with all the Proverbs, Solomon brings the focus back to being wise, making wise choices, listening to those who can lead and guide you, and being careful to keep yourself from evil – things that can lead you astray. There are so many worldly pleasures that can entice you and draw you away from righteous living, especially our children who do not have the experience to make wise choices.

One key thing that stands out is from verse 22, “Listen to your father who gave you life and do not despise your mother when she is old.” How many times do we as parents want our children to learn from our mistakes? We try to tell our children about the choices we made that clearly did not take us down the right path. We, as believers, teach our children from our own life-lessons and steer them with the Word of God as a standard for good and righteous choices. Many times our children decide to choose on their own and not listen. No matter what choice they make, we need to be there for them and love them through each chapter of their lives. The Lord loves us through every choice right or wrong. We are an example of the Lord to our children and to others we that touch. Remember we bring the light into the darkness.

You are encouraged to lean on the Lord for wisdom. He will guide you on the right path. He will show you how to be a light to others and how to be the example of His love and grace.

We pray you are encouraged by chapter 23 of Proverbs. Be wise!
